

SINGULAR PHENOMENA.—One of the most singular phenomena has occurred in our country—the like of which history has no parallel, unless we except the astonishing doings of an earthquake. About the middle of June, last the lake in the southwest part of William's township, known as Cedar Lake, was observed to rise suddenly several feet above its banks, at a time too when there had been but little rain, and there were no important streams leading into it. Thus it was considered considerable talk at the time, and no little inconvenience to persons who own land bordering on the lake. The rise was so sudden that sheep, hogs, and cattle were nearly overflown by the progress of the water.

The whole attitude of the rise was about seven and a-half feet above low water mark. The water remained almost stationary until the first of August, when, or a few days after, it was observed to fall gradually, and upon the twelfth of the same month the waters had reached their original level; and the first day of September they had fallen ten feet below low water mark, exposing hundreds of acres that had never been seen above the surface of the water. At that point the lake now remains, having maintained a stationary position for nearly three months.

The most singular feature of this phenomena has just developed itself, and may give to scientific men a solution to the mystery. While Mr. Charles Mathews, surveyor from Holden, was engaged in running out the farm of Mr. Engfield, on the north side of the lake, he discovered that either himself or the former surveyor had made an enormous blunder. Lines overlapped, and he could not tell who was in error. He called upon Mr. Henry Warren, our country surveyor, and related to him his difficulty, when they together repaired with their instruments, and commenced at the monument on the south side of the lake and ended at the west of Mr. Engfield's farm, finding a discrepancy similar to that discovered by Mr. Mathews. Mr. W., upon making the best calculation he could find that the lake, five miles from the east end, has not only lessened its volume of water, but its banks have actually been drawn together over thirty-seven rods. At the middle it is nearly four miles wide, and is a few rods over seven hundred miles in length.

We are fully satisfied with Mr. Warren's skill as a profession, and are willing to rely upon his judgment; still the development just made warrants us in devising a more thorough investigation of the subject to unravel the mystery of the mystery. Professor STRONG, who is now in St. Louis, has been written to on the subject, and it is thought he will make our village a call which perhaps may result in profit to himself and to the community at large. [Knex County Courier.]

The Baltimore papers announce the mysterious disappearance of Mr. John W. Bell, one of the heaviest flour dealers in that city. It is feared that their has been foul play.

The Rev. ROBERT MONTGOMERY, an English poet of inferior merit but wide celebrity, better known as "Saturn, Montgomery," died recently at Brigholm, in England, as the papers by the Asia inform us. His original name was Gomersy, and he was a son of a minor actor of that name attached to the Surrey Theatre, London. He added the prefix "Mont" to his name in imitation of the famous Sheffield poet, James Montgomery. Having some ability, he was educated at Oxford University, at the expense of a London Merchant, and, after graduating there was ordained as a minister in the English church. In this capacity he became quite popular as preacher at Percy Chapel London.—North American.

The Telegraph says it is reported that the Boston Times has been purchased by Alfred B. Ely, Esq., and it is to become a George Law newspaper.

The New York Tribune is informed by a gentleman "who knows the ropes," that George Law is carrying all before him in the election of delegates by the Know Nothing Councils of this State to the K. N. Presidential Convention to be held at Philadelphia on the 22d of February.—Boston Journal.

Such is the demand for ships in Baltimore that there is not an unemployed ship in port.

The St. Louis Intelligencer states that from thirty to forty dead men are taken out of the river opposite that city monthly.

People who suppose that a good prayer is preferred to a good act, doubtless imagine that God has more hearing than eye sight. The end, we fear, will show that they are mistaken from false premises. The good are often prayed for than helped.—The reason is, we believe, that breath is cheaper than bullion.

LIFE'S A RAILROAD.

Life's a railroad! Hurry on!
Always keep a-going!
Never stop to look at flowers
By the wayside growing.
Never think of anything
But your present hurry;
What if you should lose a train?
Wouldn't you be sorry?

What's the use of sighing so
And after beauty, lying
Half asleep beneath the trees
Where the winds are dying.
Where, through winding cattle-paths,
Croup the lazy hours;
And the slow-paced seasons walk
O'er unconscious flowers.

Beauty changes with the times;
Once she closes her shelter
In the shadowy solitudes,
Least the sun might melt her.
Stronger—breathed, she dashes on,
Now from town to city;
In a locomotive shape,
Nothing half so pretty.

Life was once a trodden path,
Where the travelers cheery,
Spoke to all they chanced to meet,
Or would rest, if weary.
Rest is now quite obsolete,
Sign of slumber take you,
Careless who beside you sits,
Not what chance may wake you.

Life's a railroad! Hurry on!
Always keep a-going!
Never stop to look at flowers
By the roadside growing.
Never mind what's on the track;
On—though head swim—later;
If the engine progress stops,
That's the great disaster.

SPIRITS RUNNING LOCOMOTIVES.—The Old Colony Memorial, published at Plymouth, narrates an incident which is sufficiently marvellous to please the most ardent believers in "signs and wonders." It states as a matter of common notoriety in Plymouth, that during the last summer months, between three and four o'clock in the morning, there was regularly and distinctly heard upon the railroad the whistle of an approaching train. As it was well known, that no train passed over the road at such a time in the morning, four gentlemen at the Summit House determined to investigate the mystery. Accordingly, unknown to any one, they one morning about two o'clock stationed themselves on the railroad track, about a mile from town, and awaited the arrival of the supernatural visitor. They did not watch long nor wait in vain, for immediately they distinctly heard far off in the north the sound of a railway whistle, and presently, "the distant clatter of wheels was heard—louder, nearer, nearer still it came—the click of the wheels—then, the rush of steam—as plain in their ears as if the lantern placed before them—the shriek of a demon while the clatter at hand made them leap from the track as the train thundered down the grade—the hot breath of the panting steed was in the very faces as it passed—as the unearthly scream ceased they heard the brakeman screwing up their brakes, the tinkle of a bell and a sound of meeting cars, as if the invisible spectre monster of the road had reached his journey's end."

About a month since, says the Memorial, one of the watchers visited a spirit circle in Boston, where he was an entire stranger to all persons save one, to whom he had never revealed the summer incident, when the engineer of the spectral train held spiritual converse with the astonished company. A protracted sitting was suddenly brought to a close, by the communicating spirit announcing that he must go.

"Where and for what?" some one asked. "To run the train," was the prompt answer. The sitters looked, each upon the other, and "what train?" was the universal exclamation. "The Old Colony train," was the reply. "Do you mean for us to understand that at this hour of the night a train of cars passes over that railway?" There was a long pause. Slowly and deliberately as if making no common revelation, the arm of the medium moved at last, and the pencil wrote these words: "In life I was an engineer upon that road. At stated intervals, a train, unseen of mortal eyes, takes the spirits of pious dead to the Pilgrim home they consecrated by their lives. Mr. —, who is with you, will say whether he has ever heard or knows aught of that train. It is not for mortals to know more."

The Memorial vouches for the truth of this wonderful narrative. It is a little singular; we will simply hint, that spirits who can enter rooms with closed doors, and who are ever present at the call of mediums, should require a train of cars to transport them to Plymouth.—Boston Journal.

BY TELEGRAPH.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 27.

Lord Palmerston has written a private letter to a distinguished gentleman, now in Washington, stating that the British Government anticipates the dismissal of Mr. Champton, by this Government.

It is reported that certain documents have just been received by Government from Texas, which may lead to the arrest and detention of Parker H. French, by process of law.

Official information received from the Spanish authorities, relative to the seizure of the bark Analia, on the coast of Hayti, states that she was suspected of being engaged in filibustering designs against Cuba, and the documents contain evidence to prove that charge. Spain expects this Government to punish those implicated.

"FASHIONABLE SOUP."—When I lived in New York, said Tom A., I received a visit from a country cousin, who being a rough-hewn, clever sort of fellow, I took some liking to, and as he expected, I invited him to dine with me at the Prescott House. Ed. sat at the long splendid table, mouth, ears and eyes wide open, perfectly astonished. When soup was announced, I ordered some of a new "style," which was all the go just then, and, as by some chance we had no napkins, I requested some. Garçon was prompt, and the "lusty plate" was soon before us. No sooner was it on the table, when my friend Ed. with a muttered "by Jimmy Neddy" suddenly aloofed back his chair, and before I could turn around, he was half way out of the room. I followed as soon as possible, amid the anxious looks of those next us. When I reached the hall, Ed. was there, hat in hand, waiting for me. "What in the world is the matter?" said I, anxiously. "Tom," said he, his face growing larger and redder, "I can stand to be called green, for I know I ain't up to all the kinks, but I swan I won't be called dirty by the President."

"What do you mean?" said I. "Well, Tom, I don't know what you said to that short-haired monkey in the white round about, but just after you spoke to him, he comes and sets down a big dish of water tight afore me, and then stick a towel in my face, as much as to say, Mr. Brown, you might as well wash yourself afore you eat with this crowd." And Tom, I believe he is the only man I care about seeing afore I leave this village."

Tom avows he gained four pounds flesh that week, and never till he forgets his cousin Ed. will he believe "stylish" soup is not fattening.—Springfield Republican.

TRUTH STRANGER THAN FICTION.—Last winter a gentleman in New York connected with the Mission Society patron of Dr. Alexander's church, found a ragged little girl selling candy and apples in the Park on Sunday morning.

On questioning her, he found that she came over from England, that her father and mother died on the passage, and she was then living with an old woman who forced her to sell in the Park on Sundays. The kind-hearted gentleman at first made a compromise with the old woman by giving her fifty cents every Sunday to permit the child to attend Sunday school, and afterwards put the law in force and took the girl from the old woman's control. She was then sent to an asylum, and thence to a farm house. The lady to whom she was bound was so struck with the little girl that she questioned her closely as to her history. The facts elicited induced her to write to England, and she soon received the joyful intelligence that the child's grand-parents were both living in Silling, Kent county England. The family were substantial farmers, and forthwith sent funds to bring the lost one home. She went accordingly in the next steamer, and is now living once more in comfort and affluence at the old homestead. A narrative, giving the whole story, has just been issued by the American Sunday School Union, under the title of the "Candy Girl."

THE BRITISH PERIODICALS.

AND THE FARMER'S GUIDE.

GREAT REDUCTION IN THE PRICE of the latter publication.

L. SCOTT & CO., New York, continue to publish the following leading British Periodicals, viz.:

1. THE LONDON QUARTERLY (Conservative)
2. THE EDINBURGH REVIEW (Whig)
3. THE NORTH BRITISH REVIEW (Free Church)
4. THE WESTMINSTER REVIEW (Liberal)
5. BLACKWOOD'S EDINBURGH MAGAZINE (Tory)

The great and important events—Religious, Political and Military—now agitating the nations of the Old World, give to these Publications an interest and value they never before possessed. They occupy a middle ground between the hastily written news items, crude speculations and flying rumors of the newspaper, and the ponderous Tome of the historian, written long after the living interest in the facts recorded shall have passed away.

The progress of the War in the East occupies a large space in their pages. Every movement is closely criticized, whether of friend or foe, and all short-comings fearlessly pointed out. The letters from the Crimea and from the Baltic in Blackwood's Magazine, from two of its most popular contributors, give a more intelligible and reliable account of the movements of the great belligerents than can elsewhere be found.

These Periodicals also represent the three great political parties of Great Britain—Whig, Tory, and Radical—but politics forms only one feature of their character. As Organs of the most profound writers on Science, Literature, Morality, and Religion, they stand as they ever have stood, unrivalled in the world of letters, being considered indispensable to the scholar and the professional man, while to the intelligent reader of every class they furnish a more correct and useful record of the current literature of the day, throughout the world, than can be possibly obtained from any other source.

EARLY COPIES. The receipt of Advance Sheets from the British publishers gives additional value to these Reprints, especially during the present state of European affairs, inasmuch as they can be placed in the hands of subscribers about as soon as the original editions.
